Press Release Body:

Gabrielle O'Donovan, organisational culture and change expert and author, shares her powerful audio memoir, Gino's Contraband: Guilty Until Proven Innocent, now available through Voices by INAudio. This gripping audio adaptation recounts His Majesty's Revenue & Customs' wrongful assumption that Gabrielle was responsible for a shipment of over a quarter of a million contraband cigarettes and related charges, and her challenging fight to reclaim her identity and dignity, and clear her good name. With a compelling narration, the audiobook immerses listeners in O'Donovan's emotional journey—from bureaucratic horror where she is presumed guilty to resolute advocacy. As she traces her experience - alongside that of her suicidal friend who is caught up in the broader Loan Charge scandal affecting tens of thousands - this story becomes a vital testimony for democratic accountability, mental health resilience, and the need for a Taxpayer Bill of Rights.

Highlights:

- Now distributed via Voices by InAudio worldwide to all retail partners and libraries
- Raw, immersive narration brings to life themes of injustice, human rights, courage and mental resilience and institutional reform
- Companion to the widely praised print edition (BookLife by Publishers Weekly – “Editor's Pick”; Love Reading – “Indie Books We Love”, and Literary Titan – “Gold Award”)
- A vital audiobook for political watchdogs, legal reform advocates, tax specialists, and memoir listeners

Quotes for use by the Press:

“This chilling personal account unveils a broken system that presumed me guilty before forcing me to prove I was innocent.” — Gabrielle O'Donovan

“A nerve-wracking recount of one taxpayer's battle against government incompetence.” — Literary Titan
